These serious-minded, wide-eyed, high powered judges in the American Airlines paper plane contest, G. L. Crothers, Washington manager for American Airlines; Fred Pelzman of the Federal Aviation Agency, and Robert Wilkie, sales director for General Motors, test flew the entries yesterday and deemed a swept-wing glider by Jerome Collins, 21, of 1365 A-st ne, the winner. The contest was judged on design, appearance and flying ability. Jerry who admitted he stole his design from his father, said he's been an expert paper plane flyer for years. Once, when he was at John Carroll High, a plane went out the classroom door, crashed into the principal's shins, and landed Jerry in the principal's office. "If they'd only known some day my planes would make me famous . . ." said the designer today. His award will be a trophy called a "Leonardo."
